This is from Graduation Day at the Animal Medical Center (a large veterinary specialty hospital in Manhattan). Virginia was one of our residents (studying to be a veterinary anatomic pathologist). This is the crew of the Anatomic Pathology Dept circa 2007 or so.

This shows Virginia at work and is special to me (I am on the right).

Virginia would design henna patterns on our hands when we had combined cooking/henna/knitting parties. She would do these free hand!!

Our work crew was multi-ethnic and we would gather for dumpling parties, to learn how to make Trinidadian dishes such as paratha roti, curry, coconut fudge, etc. Out of all of us, she would be the one to take these sometimes complex labor-intensive recipes and put them into her regular cooking rotation at home.
